

Biden: The Leader We Need to Confront the Climate Change Crisis

Our country is in the midst of a climate emergency made worse by President Trump's gutting of environmental protections and his refusal to take this crisis as the serious threat it is. Our failure to act soon to reverse the effects of climate change will threaten the health and well-being of every person in this country and in the global community.

Joe Biden and Kamala Harris are the leaders we need to confront the climate crisis, and to reimagine a better America that will urgently combat this crisis.

As president, Biden will:

- Launch a national effort aimed at creating jobs to build a modern, sustainable infrastructure (including schools and hospitals) and deliver an equitable clean energy future. He will ensure these investments create good union jobs that expand the middle class.
- Recommit the United States to the Paris Agreement on climate change.
- Put the United States on track to achieve a 100 percent clean energy economy and reach net-zero emissions no later than 2050.
- Rally the rest of the world to meet the threat of climate change.
- Stand up to the abuse of power by polluters who disproportionately harm communities of color and low-income communities.

Under Biden, the United States will lead the rest of the world to meet the threat of climate change. His plan for a clean energy revolution and environmental justice paves the way for a globally competitive clean energy economy that will put workers and communities first.

This is the most consequential election of our lifetimes. Every American's future will be shaped by the outcome of this election. If we are to meet this climate challenge, we must elect Biden and Harris—and a Democratic Senate to help a Democratic House of Representatives.
